1,180,000 Students
Use Natural History
Museum in a Year

Report Made at Annual Meeting of Trustees Shows
1,650 Blind Children
Were Instructed in 1920

The popularity of the American Museum of Natural History as an educational center was evidenced by the visits of more than 1,000,000 persons during the last year, according to the report of the annual meeting of the board of trustees, held last night at the home of Dr. Walter B. James, 7 East Seventieth Street.

More than 1,180,000 students made use of the nature study collections; 88,000 pupils attended the lectures; 1,650 blind children went over the material selected for their use and attended special lectures; collections loaned by the public libraries were made use of by 136,500 persons, and 116,500 slides were distributed to public school teachers.

Henry Fairfield Osborn, president of the museum, said he regarded the year 1920 as one of the greatest years in the history of the museum, inasmuch as the institution's educational value had been recognized for the first time by the present city administration, while gifts, collections and funds for expeditions represented a total of $500,000.

The year's work was concluded without the necessity of requesting the trustees to make their usual personal contributions to supplement the budget, said Mr. Osborn.

Field work included several important expeditions. Several acquisitions were made to the museum collections.

Changes in the scientific staff were announced, including the following: Dr. Henry E. Crampton, former curator of invertebrate zoology, was made honorary curator, and Dr. Willard G. Van Name was made assistant curator of lower invertebrates.

Dr. E. E. Lutz, formerly associate curator of invertebrates, was made curator of entomology; Dr. Robert Cushman Murphy, former curator of the Department of Natural Science, was made curator of marine birds; Dr. J. A. Allen, former curator of mammals, was made honorary curator of mammals.

Carl E. Akeley was made associate curator of the Department of Mammals. Dr. J. Howard McGregor, of Columbia University, was made research associate in human anatomy; E. W. Gudger was made associate in ichthyology.

A new department was formed, to be known as the Department of Comparative Anatomy, of which Dr. William E. Gregory and S. H. Chubb, both previously of the museum's staff, were made curator and assistant in osteology, respectively.

To fill vacancies on the Board of Trustees, Dr. Leonard C. Sanford, of New Haven, and A. Perry Osborn, of New York, were elected. George D. Pratt, of New York City, was elected secretary of the museum. Adrian Iselin resigned last night and Percy H. Pyne was elected as his successor.
